

Lisa Jobe-Shields, Ph.D. is Deputy Director, Community Services at the Virginia Department of Behavioral Health and Developmental Services. In this role, she works closely with the Office of Adult Community Behavioral Health, Office of Child and Family Services, Office of Community Integration as well as the Office of Behavioral Health Wellness, Office of Recovery Services, Office of Community Housing, and Office of Crisis Supports and Services. Current priorities include the implementation of a large-scale state investment in Virginia's public behavioral health system (STEP-VA), the implementation of the Marcus-David Peters Act, and working with partners at Virginia Department of Medical Assistance Services (DMAS) to expand Medicaid access to evidence-based, trauma-informed interventions for individuals across behavioral health conditions and across the lifespan (Project BRAVO). She is passionate about the coordination of child and adult mental health services to help vulnerable families thrive, data-driven and trauma informed systems of care, context-driven implementation of evidence based services, and equity in behavioral health.
